- The Affordable Care Act resulted in a significant expansion of health care coverage to working-age Americans. What has happened-and is likely to happen-to this expansion, and to the people whom it helped, under the Trump Administration?
- Tim Jost will provide a description of recent suggested and enacted changes in healthcare legislation in the past year.
- During the second half of this session, participants will be encouraged to engage in a discussion on the ethical considerations that we as Anabaptists have regarding healthcare legislation. There will also be a time for questions.

Timothy Stoltzfus Jost, J.D., is an Emeritus Professor at Washington and Lee University School of Law. He is co-author of Health Law, used widely throughout the US in teaching health law, and also the author of Health Care at Risk: A Critique of the Consumer-Driven Movement and several other books. Jost is a contributing editor at Health Affairs and has been a frequent contributor to Health Affairs Blog. He has also written numerous articles and book chapters on health care regulation and comparative health law.
